Empire Has Had

Great Leaders

It is often said that the British Empire has been fortunate in having many great men for leaders, both in politics and in combat. The leaders, both in politics and in combat. The pages of history substantiate this belief, for the story of the British people is linked with such names as Cromwell, Pitt, Gladstone, Drake. Wellington, Nelson, and counties others. The Second World War will add many more to this list, for there has been no lack of men of courage, vision and ability to lead us at this time. Although in comparison with the enemy, Britain was poorly prepared for war, men came forward in every branch of service, who were able to lead the nation to a position of vast superiority, in spite of air raids, submarine warfare, bomb attacks and numerous other difficulties. It is true that the resources of the United Nations were greater than those of the enemy, but they could not have been so quickly and effectively mobilized had we been less fortunate in the quality of our leaders.

Route Without Dog

A Seeing-Eye dog with a nose for news is the means of a livelincod, for blind Roy Noseman of Waynesville.

N.C. reparts "Our Dumb Animals." The dog, fondly called "Sallie," hasn't a distinctive family tree that anyone knows of—she's just plain dog, but she has been trained to do all the things required of a true Seeing-Eye dog—and many more. Sallie's master, Roy, had to make a living, so he decided to sell newspapers in order to build up a cash reserve for a future enterprise. But a newsstand in this small town was out of the question. It was then that Sallie came to the rescue. Together they now operate a delivery route. People of Waynesville call Sallie practically human. Roy starts out on his route, his arms bulging with papers. Sallie, believe it or not, knows every step, on the entire route. Frequently, Rey makes a mistake in tossing a paper, toward a perch. When he does, Sallie halts, disengages his grip on her harness and redeposits the paper in the proper place.

"Did you see that ad?" he managed finally. "The one about the small farm for sale, just sixty-five hundred dollars."

"Oh." said Mama indifferently, "is that cheap?"

Deb didn't know if it was cheap or not. That wasn't the point.

"That's just what we got!" said Deb. "Sixty-five hundred dollars."

Mama looked startled: "Now, Papa, you don't know a thing about farming, and you're too old to learn."
"We could have a garden and flowers and things." Deb argued divisifully, "No. Papa, we are too old to make a charge now," she said stubbornly.

The next day on his way home at noon, Deb met Mary.

"I guess Tom and I can't get married this year," she said unhappily. "I looked at apartments, but the rents are too high."

Deb said, resentfully, "If we took that farm, you and Tom could have this place, rent-free."

He saw Mary's stricken look, and thought, spitefully: It serves her right for always siding in with her mother.

The premiums paid by its more than one million policyholders go into a common fund operated for their benefit. It is out of this fund that policy obligations are paid as they become due. Each individual policyholder has an interest in the common fund according to the particular form noider has an interest in the common fund according to the particular form of contract he holds. The relationship of the Company to its policyholders is in the nature of a trusteeship under which the Company agrees to carry out its obligations with the money entrusted to its care.
